In my private practice, I work with individuals and people in relationships toward the goal of discovering how to access and express our deepest selves and form meaningful connections. I specialize in addiction and recovery, trauma, body image issues, relationship therapy, and life transitions. I am committed to celebrating LGBTQ and gender variant people and communities and have a particular interest in working with gender variant individuals and their loved ones, as well as non-traditional relationship structures. I work relationally, using psychoanalytic and postmodern theories as well as narrative techniques in making links between subject and culture/subculture, always challenging gender stereotypes that keep us limited. In addition to office-based therapy, I have developed a practice integrating psychotherapy and outdoor physical exercise. TRAVERSE Integrative Outdoor Therapy brings together my interests and expertise in psychological and body-based practices.
